Students in Porter County have formed a group called Teens United for Ethnic Awareness with the help of the Family and Youth Services Bureau in Valparaiso. Thirty students from five schools in Porter County comprise the group.

Waking up to hate

Indiana is one of eight states without laws that punish criminals motivated by hate. Illinois' hate-crime law is said to be one of the most effective in the country.

When Randolph Benwell II and Darrell Blanchard slipped into their Ku Klux Klan white robes and hoods and trashed a Portage woman's mobile home in July 1997, they weren't just getting their kicks like garden-variety vandals.

The men were making a point. They wanted the Hispanic resident and her white boyfriend out of the neighborhood.

And it worked. A few days later the woman, whose name was never disclosed by the media, moved to a new, secret location. Her life was changed forever.

Meanwhile, Benwell and Blanchard, both 20 at the time of the incident, were tried in federal court for property damage and violating the woman's civil rights. They were convicted and tossed in jail — one year for Benwell and four months for Blanchard.

After two more years of supervised parole, the pair will be free to come and go as they please, while their victim is forced to keep a low profile.

Some lawmakers and prosecutors want to see stiffer penalties for criminals motivated by hate. After Benwell and Blanchard were sentenced in September, U.S. Attorney Jon DeGuilio lamented what he considered their weak penalties.

"I regret that the United States' sentencing guidelines do not provide greater punishment for such conduct," DeGuilio said.

The same is true for Indiana sentencing guidelines. The Benwell and Blanchard cases might have been tried in a Porter County court if prosecutors could have sought appropriate penalties for the pair, but no state or federal law offers enhanced sentences when a crime is motivated by hate.

That could change as citizens' interest in the topic swells in response to the recent murders of James Byrd, a black Texas man, and Matthew Shepard, an openly gay Wyoming student. People are asking how the crimes might have been avoided and how the alleged perpetrators might be prosecuted more aggressively.

Erica Lo of Portage High School, left, and Katie Brocksmith of Wheeler High School have fun talking about finding diversity activities in the area for the group to attend.

Hate crimes outnumber statistics

A proposed national hate crime prevention bill is receiving widespread support. And many state legislators across the country hope to implement new and tougher laws closer to home to protect minority groups.

Indiana is right in there with them.

One proposal

When it comes to hate crime legislation, Indiana is in a tiny minority. It is one of only eight states that has never enacted a law that sets penalties for criminals motivated by hate.

To many Indiana law enforcement agencies and advocacy groups, this is a lapse they hope to correct in the upcoming legislative session. The idea isn't new. During every session of the General Assembly since 1992, some version of hate crime legislation has been introduced — and shot down. One state representative has vowed to give it another try.

Rep. Bill Crawford, D-Indianapolis, has introduced hate crime legislation seven times. He is now counting on public support to give his initiative the push it needs to become law.

"I think there is growing awareness in the state," Crawford said.

With the backing of the Indiana Black Legislative Caucus, Crawford has fought for the passage of penalty enhancement laws for hate crimes.

The Indiana Civil Rights Commission defines a hate crime as, "a criminal offense committed against a person or property which is motivated, in whole, or in part, by the offender's bias against the victim's race, religion, disability, ethnic origin, national origin or sexual orientation."

Crawford's law would increase penalties for crimes based on those bias categories. Last year, the proposal was approved in the House of Representatives but never got a vote in the Senate. Crawford has his theory on why.

"The main stumbling block has been sexual orientation," he said, although his opponents dismiss that contention. Crawford said he would not propose his bill without including sexual orientation as a bias category.

Schools experience hate, bigotry

■ Educators work to promote diversity and multiculturalism among students.

BY LAURA DIAMOND
Times Staff Writer

Teens come to school wearing shiny red Nazi swastika pins on their jean jackets. Others refer to their community as a white man's town. Letters printed in school newspapers extol the racist views of some students. Lockers display Confederate flag stickers. An elementary schoolgirl calls a little boy the "n" word. A group of African-American students ask Hispanic teens if they have green cards.

All these incidents have happened in area schools during the last five years — both in ethnically diverse schools such as East Chicago, Merrillville and Calumet City, Ill., and homogeneous districts such as Chesterton, Crown Point and Schererville.

Students don't live a vacuum. They pick up on the biases expressed by their parents and other adults in their community. Then, they bring those beliefs into the classroom.

School environments differ from the adult world in that students and educators are taking steps to stop the spread of hatred. They have created student support groups, multiculturalism

Police chief's future questioned

■ Schererville police commission members say Parker's job is safe.

BY CHRISTOPHER SHEID
Times Staff Writer

SCHERERVILLE - Despite the Schererville Police Department's recent ticket-pulling controversy, and despite being on the outs with at least one town councilman, Police Chief Donald Parker doesn't appear to be in danger of losing his job. That was the word from a majority of Police Commission members last week who said the possibility of replacing Parker was not something the commission had discussed nor anything they had considered individually.

Parker has received some criticism the past few months for the Police Department's controversial policy of reviewing traffic citations prior to filing them with the Town Court. His relationship with Town Council President Mark Cowan, D-3rd, has been particularly rocky. Nonetheless, Parker received high praise from councilmen and commission members alike who said he has served the town well and should remain on the job.

Councilman John Fladeland, D-2nd, was one who expressed concern that Parker's job might be at risk from the council's voting majority, which includes Cowan, Edward Cook, R-4th, and Thomas Shanley, R-1st. Shanley is a sergeant with the department.

"Chief Parker has done a fine job for this community, and I hope he is allowed to remain chief," Fladeland said. "He has my 100-percent vote of confidence."

Police Commission Chairman Earl Bell said he was not aware of any push to remove Parker.

"Speaking as an individual, I have no information in that respect at all," said Bell. "It's certainly not on my agenda, unless someone else has some kind of information that I don't know about."

Commission member Allan Ourednik said rumors of removal have always swirled around Schererville's police chiefs past and present, but that no one has approached him about removing Parker.

Ourednik said, "Some of the statistics on the length of terms for past chiefs indicate he's beaten the odds so far. He must be doing something right to keep hanging in there."

Commission member Robin Thiel echoed those sentiments, saying Parker had steered the department in the right direction during his tenure.

"I've never been involved in any discussions about getting rid of the chief," Thiel said. "I think he's done a good job. I believe that would be a great loss for the town."

Cowan said the police chief's position is an appointment recommended by the Police Commission and approved by the council. He said the Police Commission would determine whether to remove Parker as chief, though he believed the council would have final approval over that decision. Shanley said he understood the Police Commission to hold sole authority over removal of the chief.

Parker said Friday he recognizes his tenure as police chief is subject to the will of the commission and council.

"If the Police Commission of the Town Council decide they want to go in a different direction, that is certainly within their realm of authority," Parker said. "We have tried to do what is best for this Police Department and this community. We have tried to keep the politics out of it."

On Her 2nd Birthday In Heaven

We aren't together to celebrate your 57th birthday, but we have our memories of your past birthdays that we will hold in our hearts forever.

We miss the bulk of birthday cards that came on your special day. We can never forget asking you what you wanted for your birthday, and your answer being "I don't need nothing I have everything I want." The one thing we wish we could have given you, was a cure for your disease. But God needed one more special person in heaven and he took you. Someday we will be all together again.

Love always,

On His First Anniversary in Heaven

If we could have a lifetime wish,
A wish that could come true,
We'd pray to God with all our hearts,
for yesterday and you.
A thousand words can't bring you back,
We know because we've tried.
And neither will a million tears,
we know because we've cried.
You left us with a broken heart,
and precious memories, too.
But we never wanted memories
we only wanted you.

Hate

His bill, now being drafted, would do the following: require all police departments to report hate crimes, require training for police on hate-crime investigations, allow victims to sue for damages, and make hatred an aggravating factor in the sentencing phase of a trial.

The last item is the crown jewel of Crawford's bill. With this weapon, prosecutors who have won a guilty verdict then could argue that the victim was chosen out of hatred.

"The judge could enhance the sentence up to four or five years," Crawford said.

Arguments for

Supporters of hate crime legislation can be found in many prominent advocacy groups.

Aaron Goldberg, assistant director of the Anti-Defamation League's Midwest chapter, said hate crimes against individuals victimize an entire community.

"It goes beyond just the individual," said Goldberg, whose group represents, minority - specifically Jewish - interests. "In that sense it has to be treated in a special way."

Bills such as Crawford's would be applied best to lower-profile crimes such as vandalism, intimidation or assault, Goldberg said. Defendants in cases such as the Matthew Shepard or James Byrd murders already face capital penalties that wouldn't be enhanced by hate-crime laws.

Barbara Bolling, president of the Gary Branch National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the NAACP supports the spirit of hate-crime legislation and wishes Crawford's proposal would go a little further.

An effective bill, Bolling said, also would mandate education for children on racial issues, because such training - especially in schools - might prevent crimes rather than simply punish for them.

Hate Crime Laws in the United States, July 1998

Hate crime laws include crimes based on sexual orientation: 21 states and District of Columbia

Hate crime laws do not include crimes based on sexual orientation: 19 states

Do not have hate crime laws that include crimes based on any characteristics: 10 states AK HI

Texas law addresses hate crime in general, but does not name specific characteristics, and is essentially unenforceable.

Maryland and Utah hate crime data collection laws include sexual orientation, but hate crime penalty laws do not.

Tennessee has a "civil rights intimidation" law that does not apply to sexual orientation.

Source: National Gay and Lesbian Task Force web site

"I think we need to do some preventative things," she said. "You've got to combat that negative teaching."

As a state agency, the Indiana Civil Rights Commission stops short of taking a side in the debate. But Deputy Director Bruce Jefferson said it is definitely an issue that should be discussed in Indiana. Typically, hate crimes are worse than crimes with other motivations.

Jefferson said hate crimes tend to be more violent, more traumatizing and frequently repeated. And, hatred puts certain communities at a greater risk than others. For example, a gay man is 400 times more likely to be victimized than members of the population at large, he said.

"There are many segments of the population that think this is a big problem."

Arguments against

Those in opposition to hate-crime laws believe Crawford and others are overlooking an important component of democracy - freedom of speech and thought. If a bill such as Crawford's passes, it would trample on people rights to think and say what they want, opponents say.

Sen. Richard Bray, R-Martinsville, is an outspoken opponent of hate-crime legislation. Bray uses an argument put forward by the Indiana Civil Liberties Union that says government should protect citizens' rights to say and think anything, no matter how despicable.

"You cannot outlaw hating," Bray said. "Hating is a First Amendment issue."

Bray said he isn't sure how he would vote on Crawford's bill. If it tramples on free speech, he will oppose it.

Bray said, however, that he would support a carefully tailored bill that is a practical tool for prosecutors, and one that cannot be misused or abused.

"I'm not saying it couldn't be done," he said.

Neither is Brett Shankman, president of the Jewish Community Relations Council in Indianapolis. Shankman, whose group might benefit from hate-crime legislation, said he isn't willing to sacrifice any freedom of speech in favor of enhanced penalties for hate-crime offenders.

"We really think (Crawford's proposal) gets uncomfortably close to stepping on people's freedom of speech rights," he said.

Shankman said he likes the elements of the proposal that would require police to report all hate crimes to the state. And he supports additional training for officers in hate-crime investigation. But his support ends when it comes to enhancing penalties.

If someone wants to hate Jews, he should be allowed to hate them, he said.

ana to that list.

Nineteen states have hate-crime laws of varying strengths that don't include sexual orientation as a bias category.

Illinois has a hate-crime law that includes crimes based on all characteristics, and state officials boast that the law is one of the most effective in the country.

Enacted in 1991, Illinois' hate-crime statute makes hate crimes a separate charge and not just an aggravating factor.

Renee Goldfarb, chief of criminal appeals in Cook County, said, the Illinois statute can convert a misdemeanor offense into a class four felony. If the initial charge is already a felony, hatred may be used as a aggravating factor in sentencing.

For example, the three men charged with 1997 beating of 13-year-old Lenard Clark in Chicago were convicted of aggravated battery and also of hate crimes.

"In essence, it's a penalty enhancement," Goldfarb said.

She said that since the law's enactment, Illinois hate crimes have been on the decline. Goldfarb believes the hate-crime statute has helped. Perhaps the would-be criminals are finally getting the message, she said.

"I think it's had a tremendous impact," she said.

The Illinois attorney general's office reported that prosecutors used the hate-crime statute about 450 times in 1997. Of those 450 charges, 72.8 percent were on race-related charges, 12.8 percent were for sexual orientation-related offenses, and 6.4 percent were religion-related.

Goldfarb said that at the very least, enactment of hate-crime legislation gives states a chance to make a statement against hatred. She expects Indiana to join the ranks of states with hate-crime laws next year and catch up to the mind-set other states have had for years.

What about Indiana?

Lake County Prosecutor Bernard Carter said prosecutors in Northwest Indiana would make good use of hate-crime laws.

"I think it's needed," Carter said. He said a criminal's motive always should be taken into consideration. Bias against the victim should warrant a stiff penalty.

"That makes it worse," Carter said. "As prosecutors, we argue that point in every case we have."

Wisconsin's penalty enhancement law did not have a "chilling effect" on free speech.

Thoughts and speech are not the same as beatings and vandalism, the court said.

Most state legislatures seem to agree.

There are 21 states with hate-crime laws that include all usual bias categories, including sexual orientation, according to statistics compiled by the National Gay and Lesbian Task force. Crawford's bill would add Indi-

But if the law avoids free speech violations, he would be glad to have it.

He agreed that in cases such as the Benwell and Blanchard vandalism case, a judge should consider hatred as an aggravating factor because an entire community is violated, not just the victim whose name shows up on the police report.

"Under the right circumstances, you would like to be able to aggravate something for the senselessness of it."

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Synopsis:

To report results of Civil Rights investigation concerning [REDACTED] during the period 2/11/1999 to 6/15/1999.

- P* -

DETAILS:

On [REDACTED] [REDACTED] received a letter from the National Vanguard. The letter contained racial epithets directed at [REDACTED] who forwarded the letter to U.S. Attorney Jon DeGuilio who then forwarded the letter to the FBI.

On [REDACTED] was recently quoted in a local newspaper article that dealt with racial diversity and hate crime legislation. On [REDACTED] received this letter from the National Vanguard. [REDACTED] believed the newspaper article caused the letter to be mailed to [REDACTED]. While [REDACTED] believed the letter was threatening, [REDACTED] did not feel it was a direct threat to her.

The letter was sent to the Laboratory Division for latent fingerprint examination on 1/19/1999. Contact was made with the Laboratory which advised that the item has not yet been processed. This case is still carried as

Dear Niggers,

How much more of your bullshit do you think that the white race is going to tolerate? Homocide, rape, prostitution, and drugs run rampant in your communities and you have the audacity to come into ours and try and tell us that we don't have the right to fly the Confederate flag! You say it represents racism, we say it represents Southern Heritage. You say it represents slavery, we say it represents the soldiers that gave their lives in the Civil War. Who do you black bastards think that you are? That flag has just as much right to fly in South Carolina as the American flag. If it was up to you people, the stars and bars would be replaced with red, black, and green. If you want red, black, and green go back to your homeland where you belong.

Another problem that needs to be discussed is about that big-mouthed son of a bitch [redacted] We're tired of him interfering in our business. You people had your Civil rights enacted back in 1964 and you're still not satisfied. You have this idiot running off at the mouth. First, by defending those gang-banging niggers in Decatur, IL. Then, leading that march in South Carolina to get them to remove the Confederate flag from the State building. Now he has to get involved in the firing of [redacted] coach [redacted] The nigger had a good team and only led them to a mediocre 8-8 record. Racism?, No, I say it's just the legitimate firing of a nigger that couldn't do the job. Then [redacted] says that there aren't enough black head coaches and general managers. Is it our fault that there aren't enough niggers qualified for the positions?

Every time a black man is looked at differently by a white person doesn't mean it's discrimination. Every time a black man is fired from his job doesn't mean it's discrimination. Every time a black man loses out on a job to a white man doesn't mean it's discrimination. Did you people ever think about the possibility that we're more capable? We're tired of you people blaming all of your problems and injustices on racism. You have every law and every organization in this country to protect your rights and you're never content. You have this organization (NAACP), ACLU, Black Muslims, Panthers, etc. Affirmative Action is the measure taken to prevent unlawful employment and remedy the effects of past discrimination through efforts to recruit, employ, and advance women, minorities, and the disabled. That sure doesn't sound like a policy to help advance the white people in this country.

Other side nigger

Well niggers the bottom line is this; white people in this country are fed up. We're fed up with being 2nd class citizens in a country that our ancestors built and made strong. Trying to ban our flag, take away our rights and our jobs even though we're more qualified, enough is enough. I suggest that you relay this message to your South Carolina branch of the NAACP. It won't be long before a bullet is put into [REDACTED] And his Rainbow Coalition silenced. The white race has had enough. The only thing that we ~~were celebrating~~ on Martin Luther Coon's birthday, is that [REDACTED] wasn't killed by James Earl Ray with King on that hotel balcony in Memphis Tennessee.

White race!
